Focusing on improved performance

When it comes to workforce performance, the best way to know which direction to go is to determine where you are. But when you're in the midst of things, it's sometimes difficult to see what needs to be improved and how to proceed.

TDS provides an independent third-party perspective, identifying gaps, measuring how productivity is impacted by various human factors and developing a plan to improve performance. After all, performance is about people.

PREPARING FOR EXCELLENCE

We begin every project by partnering with our client to analyze current issues and determine solutions. During the analysis, we identify gaps and opportunities for improvement in three areas:

1. Knowledge employees need to do the job
2. Resources available and necessary to do the job effectively and efficiently
3. Motivation people have to do their work at optimum performance standards

Some questions we may ask during this phase include:

- What are the desired performance standards?
- How are performance standards being communicated?
- What resources are necessary to perform their tasks?
- How is good performance rewarded?
- In what ways do employees demonstrate job knowledge?
